Lull in Fighting on Eastern and Tunisian Fronts

From the Fuehrer's Headquarters, April 3rd, 1943.

The German Supreme Command announces:

South of Lake Ilmen a German attack was carried out successfully despite great terrain difficulties. Knee-deep in mud and in water reaching chest high, the German troops achieved their objectives, forced an enemy battle group in a swamped area and annihilated it.

The enemy lost 1,225 dead and 370 prisoners, 23 tanks, 25 guns, 66 flame-throwers, 14 trench mortars and 92 machine-guns were either destroyed or captured.

To the south of Lake Ladoga the enemy repeated his attacks with weaker forces than on the previous days.

All was quiet on the rest of the Eastern Front.

From the Tunisian front only minor activity is reported. German attacks closed several breaches effected by the enemy during the previous day. The enemy suffered considerable losses in the course of these operations.

Last night German bombers attacked an enemy convoy off the North-African coast and achieved hits on 2 large merchant vessels.

In the Mediterranean German submarine chasers sank a British submarine and damaged a second one and an E-boat so heavily that their loss also may be assumed.

From the Fuehrer's Headquarters, April 4th, 1943.

The German Supreme Command announces:—

Repeated attacks by the Soviets against the Eastern Front of the Kuban bridgehead, as well as to the south of Lake Ilmen and in front of Leningrad, were repulsed with heavy losses for the enemy, while fresh concentrations of enemy forces were smashed by artillery fire and attacks of the German Air Force.

On the remainder of the front the day passed uneventfully, but for some local fighting in the area of Isium.

Also in Tunisia yesterday passed generally without greater operations. Only in some sectors of the Central and South Tunisian Front there was lively local activity.

British bombers attacked several localities in Western Germany last night. Considerable damage was caused, particularly in the town area of Essen. The civilian population suffered losses. German night-fighters and anti-aircraft artillery shot down at least 21 of the raiding aircraft.

Anti-aircraft artillery of the German Air Force and the Navy, as well as patrol boats and submarine-chasers shot down eight enemy aircraft over the Norwegian coast and the occupied territories in the West and in the Mediterranean.

A formation of fast German bombers dropped bombs of heavy calibre on military objectives in the town of Eastbourne in the course of a daylight raid against the south coast of England.

Trade on the Defensive

It is not surprising that the war and its consequences push trade in some respect on the defensive. But even on the defensive one may perform fruitful work, and the German export merchant shows by his quick extension in new territories and on new markets that he has not become paralysed.

The fundamental release of inland trade for export firms may have checked in a few cases the energy to turn to new tasks in the foreign trade.

But those have been exceptions, and the question, whether the "pure" export merchant will be justified at all in the future or whether the merchant for inland and foreign trade will be preferable, may be regarded as settled.

Besides, we will not renounce the overseas trade after the war; on the contrary, we will, together with the Axis partners, contribute to a reasonable division of work of world economy. At the same time we want to develop and intensify the exchange of goods in Europe, and only the merchantmen can realise these aims in the long run. If the state itself becomes a trader, it is only to "organise the want," and this refers to inland trade as well as to foreign trade.

But the day will come when the world will desire to sell her goods again. Then there will no longer be any contingents and rations, and the export merchantman will no longer be on the defensive.

Roosevelt—A War-Like Apostle of Peace

Georges Suarez, the well-known French writer, examines American war diplomacy in a leading article in the Paris newspaper "Aujourd'hui," and in his argument shows how President Roosevelt is, in fact, a "prisoner" awaiting the consequences which have been caused by his action.

Suarez observes:—"There is always in American politics a fatalism which provokes an opposite conclusion to that intended. During the Great War President Wilson fought successfully the English blockade, the German torpedo warfare and the conditions of the Armistice!

After having, in the first case, so acted as to incite England to declare war, America became England's Ally, and applied to the blockade regulations yet more cruel and exacting than those she condemned.

"In the second case, America became the enemy of Germany after having made a super-bid for neutrality in the election for a President in 1916.

"In 1918, the American General Bliss, acting under the instructions of Wilson, exacted conditions more severe than those of Marshal Foch. In 1920 America repudiated the treaties she had signed; in 1922 she turned away from the Allies which she accused of intransigence in regard to Germany.

Briefly, in all important circumstances, America has obeyed a will stronger than her own. Why this? Effect of democratic ways? Of a Parliamentary system not understood? Of institutions badly managed? Possibly with Wilson when the public debate made the argument of the evening the obligation of the next day. But certainly not with Roosevelt, who has suspended certain liberties and controlled others.

"Nevertheless Roosevelt does not seem to be more master of the situation and its solution than was Wilson in his time. Roosevelt in 1938, in a famous message, denounced the War as a crime, waxed indignant at the economic and social ruins which war must provoke and refused to believe in the inevitability of hostilities.

It will be a Long War

Following the talks with Mr. Anthony Eden, at a Press conference in Washington, Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, declared that the war would last much longer than it was apt to be thought.

Mr. Cordell Hull added that it was absolutely necessary to arrive at a complete understanding between the British and American governments, not only on the conduct of the war but also on the most important post-war problems. This entails, must have, for its foundation most cordial and complete exchange of information, an exchange in which the Soviet Union and China must take part.

"Six months later Roosevelt proclaimed that the interests of his country were specifically American, and that if he replied to Germany dumping by a Customs surtax it was not imposed as a menace to Germany but with the purpose of protecting America. Then Roosevelt became interested and disquieted in regard to the progress of Japan in China waters, and, finally, dispatched his fleet to the Pacific, not the Atlantic Ocean.

"Thus, like Wilson, Roosevelt was on the war-path while yet proclaiming himself the champion of Peace. And such he is, in truth, for his own people, but not for others! By the action of his official emissaries, by his public and private statements, he encouraged the European democracies to let loose, in the name of moral principles, a conflict which has for purpose only such interests as the resumption of the progress of American industry, restitution to the financiers of Wall Street of their lost clients, and to the Jews, the mainstay of their politics and of their weakening power.

"But himself, he held his own country off from actual war. In the first place because the people did not wish it, and in the second place because they profited by conditions of war. Without Japan, which put a premature end to this period of provocative speculation, Roosevelt would have remained the warmonger in Europe and the champion of Peace in America. Like Wilson, he was compelled to submit to a will stronger than his own.

Eden in U.S. to Attempt Anglo-American Understanding

According to the British News Service Mr. Anthony Eden has been in conference with Mr. Stimson, America's Minister of War, and Colonel Knox, Minister of Naval Warfare, on military and political questions. Mr. Eden also met Mr. John Llewellyn, Head of the British Road Delegation.

The "Exchange Telegraph" announces also that Mr. Eden has seen President Roosevelt at the White House.

According to the United Press, no special programme had been prepared for Mr. Eden. Nevertheless, it is believed in official circles that the relations with the U.S.S.R., the Russo-Japanese and the Russo-Yugoslav tension were to be debated.

Officially, it is stated that the visit took place at the invitation of the United States, but it is thought that Great Britain did its utmost to provoke it with the intention of settling the many points of difference existing between the two countries, which, for the past few weeks, have become more and more numerous.

It is a well-known fact that the British Statesmen have closer relations, both officially and privately, with the Soviet Union, than have the United States. It is well-known that Mr. Eden holds very friendly relations with Moscow and that on one of his visits to the Soviet capital, prepared the draft of the Anglo-Russian Treaty.

The debate also embodied the Giraud-de Gaulle problem and, finally, the American Imperialism which is causing great anxiety in many British circles.

A typical example of these differences is that of the post-war civil aviation programme. Among other pending questions must be mentioned the aero-naval bases, especially those of the Pacific; the question of the Dutch Colonies and the control of pewter and rubber. It is not known if the Indian problem will form part of the discussions. The future of Africa, which may become the starting-point of a repartition of raw materials from the Colonies, may perhaps be discussed.

The important character of Mr. Eden's negotiations is stressed in competent circles especially as they may result in an understanding between the United States and Great Britain, which may later end in a mutual agreement.

What Could Replace Coal?

The question as to what will happen when the world's supply of coal and mineral oil is exhausted, has frequently occupied the minds of scientists. Although it is estimated that, provided the present annual production figures do not increase, the earth's coal supplies will last another 2,000 years, it is necessary, that plans be made for the future, by which the exhaustible mineral supplies be augmented by the use of such raw materials as are inexhaustible. It is well-known for example, that the potato, which is rich in carbohydrates can, by means of fermentation, be used not only for the production of spirits but also for motor-fuel.

In an article in the periodical "The Four Year Plan" by K. R. Dietrich, the many possibilities of producing chemical products from plants are discussed. As is generally known, brandy, wine and beer are produced by a process of chemical fermentation. But this branch of chemistry is not confined to the production of spirits, but particularly in the last 20 years the production of some of the principal products in the chemical industry has been possible by means of this process.

Unlike other countries such as America, France and Russia, which are not only rich in coal and mineral oil but also have agricultural surpluses, Germany's activities in this sphere have necessarily been confined to the fermentation of potato starch, and this on a comparatively modest scale. Even America has developed methods of producing oil from carbohydrates, in spite of her enormous reserves of natural oil. American industrialists regard this process as a cheaper and more simple way of securing oil supplies in case of an exhaustion of the natural sources, than the synthetic production of oil from coal.

Now that Germany is in a position to organize and develop the vast territories in the East of Europe, she, too, will be in a position to exploit the natural products of this area to the utmost. In this way it will now be possible more easily to meet the growing raw material requirements in the Reich, particularly by supplementing the growing demand for coal in the chemical industry, through the use of extra raw material sources in the form of carbohydrates.

At present the use of synthetic substitutes for coal, serve only as a foundation for preserving the natural coal and oil supplies. But the time will come when carbohydrates will have to take the place of coal and mineral oil entirely. For everything points to the fact that the present supplies of coal, with the increasing demands of industry, cannot last for ever. With Russian agriculture governed by National-Socialist policy, the way will be open to complete independence of the chemical industry from coal.

Guardians of a Great Tradition

The charge that the National-Socialist Movement was anti-intellectual was definitely refuted by Reich Propaganda Minister Dr. Goebbels in a recent speech.

The Minister pointed out that it was true that the National-Socialists had not the slightest sympathy for a certain type of pseudo-intellectualism, with their constant morbid criticism, were to be regarded as a dangerous destructive element.

The National-Socialists had, however, the greatest respect for the genuine, intelligentia of a nation, scientists, artists and other honest mental workers. The inventive genius of the men in research laboratories was helping the nation to win the war, and the National-Socialists were the last people to underestimate the importance of the strenuous work performed in the war by mental workers amongst whom were also the poets and writers. To their work the "Week of the German Book" was dedicated.

Dr. Goebbels then exhorted the German poets and writers always to be aware of the fact that they were heirs and guardians of a noble literary tradition, but to strive to find contact with the present time and its problems. The Minister expressed his gratification that, in the field of lyrics, this aim has been often admirably achieved. He suggested that the war and experiences of the war, the heroism of the soldiers of the Third Reich, the life of workers in town and country were providing a wide range of subjects to stimulate the imagination of the German poets and writers. The Minister suggested, moreover, that special efforts be made by the writers to provide good light reading for such people as were merely seeking relaxation from hard work.

England's Achilles Heel

"The problem of shipping space," says the "Daily Mail," is England's heel of Achilles. And no amount of help from America can alter that. Germany will inevitably be victorious over England through her U-boats whose power and successes are becoming increasingly greater."

IN THE NEWS TO-DAY

Guernsey, April 5.

Again and again Marshal Rommel has displayed remarkable generalship during the course of the fluctuating battle in Libya and North Africa. Now, in Tunisia, with his divisions outnumbered tenfold by the Anglo-Americans, Rommel has contrived to turn a desperate situation into one that dispels all thoughts of capitulation of the Axis Forces or of their evacuation from North Africa.

Despite the pressure of the strong forces pitted against him, Rommel, adopting the tactics of the "elastic front" which have proved so successful on the Eastern Front, withdrew his divisions from the Mareth Line and, with the Anglo-Americans caught completely "on the wrong foot," has now concentrated his men with the divisions of General von Arnim. Attempts by the attacking forces to drive a wedge between the sections and encircle them have been badly frustrated. The Anglo-Americans still face Rommel: but a Rommel who will be able to return thrust for thrust; a Rommel no longer completely on the defensive.

To replace the static Mareth Line there has now arisen, following the elasticity of the Fieldmarshal's tactics, a new system of fortification, of considerable depth, and of deeply echeloned strong points. Similar operations were used at Viasma, in the Russian campaign, with unbounded success. Under Rommel's direction it is hardly likely that in the Tunisian fighting they will be entirely unsuccessful.

Moreover, Rommel in the recent fighting has lost comparatively few men and little material; while the losses of the attacking forces have been high.

The battle is still raging, the outcome still in the balance. But it must be remembered that while Anglo-American men, planes, boats and materials are slung into the struggle, elsewhere in Europe German Forces continue unimpeded. For that reason the right to Tunisia, the advanced bridgehead of Europe, will be contested to the end.

THE SERVICE

The hymn "Rock of Ages" was sung. Mr. Davis read Psalm 23 and the Rev. E. L. Frossard, M.A., Rector of St. Sampson's, read Revelation, chap. 21 (1-9) as the Scripture Lesson. The hymn "Now the labourer's task is o'er" was sung before the address, given by the Rector of St. Sampson's.

REV. E. L. FROSSARD'S ADDRESS

"It is my sorrowful privilege to-day," said Mr. Frossard, "to say farewell to my old friend, Mr. Peek, and, as I do so, I feel I am speaking for all who are here, and also for many who are unable to be with us. The number of those present in this Church is a silent but eloquent witness of the love in which our friend was held in this Island, where he was born and where he spent the whole of his long and busy life. I say long, because to him was granted to outlive by a substantial margin the allotted span; busy, because almost to the last he was occupied with the things that interested him."

"As I reflect upon his personality," the Rector observed, "I have tried to find a word which would adequately describe his character. I can think of no better one than this—vitality. It is given to few to enjoy such vitality from the cradle to the grave, and in his case it found expression in four channels: physical health, business activity, love of friends, and religion. He looked upon his marvellous physical health, preserved almost unimpaired to the end, as the gift of God, and was ever grateful to Him for it. Of his business activity, it is hardly the place to speak of it here apart from one point of view. He looked upon business not merely as a money-making machine, but as an expression of relationship between human beings. He took a personal interest in those he employed; nothing, for example, gave him more pleasure than to make a wedding presentation in his office, or to be present at a staff Christmas party. Many of you to-day mourn not so much a Chairman of Directors but a father."

"He loved the companionship of his fellow-men. Some people like to be alone; they prefer their own company to that of any other; they shut themselves up in a solitude of their own making. Not so with Gervase Peek; he enjoyed friendship and gave it to others with all his generous heart. All along religion played a very definite part in his life. Brought up by a very devout mother, he never allowed anything to disturb or displace his simple faith. Sunday morning to him was the time for worship, as you know, in this Church, and as I have seen him Sunday after Sunday in his place at St. Sampson's Church, whatever the weather or other circumstances might be."

"He once told me," Mr. Frossard said, "how on one of his world-wide cruises he had been able to attend divine worship every Sunday, either on ship or ashore. As a reward for his faith God gave him that which will ever remain with me a beautiful memory of him: fortitude and courage in the face of intense suffering during the last year of his long life. The finest trait in his character then revealed itself. Adversity is the one thing which shows us what people really are. Gervase Peek revealed himself in sorrow and suffering as a brave man who would not be beaten. His gallant fight against suffering, his courageous acceptance of sorrow as his last legacy to us—a fragrant and enduring memory."

Prayers and Collects were offered by Mr. Davis, and so to the Blessing, the closing hymn being "Abide with me." As the coffin was borne from the Church through the open lines of the Guard of Honour the Dead March in "Saul" was played.

Mr. William Vaudin, who presided at the organ, played requiem music before the service, the compositions including "Crucifixus" from the Mass in B minor (Bach); "The Adagio movement from the 'Sonate Pathétique' (Beethoven); "Quando Corpus" from "Stabat Mater" (Rossini); and "Ave Maria" (Schubert).

The wreaths, numbering about 150, formed a picturesque scene at St. Sampson's Church Cemetery, where the warm spring sunshine gave additional beauty to the colourful array.

As Mr. Peek was laid to rest in the family vault several friends and parishioners from the North gathered to pay their last respects. The committal prayers were read by Mr. Frossard.

Mr. and Mrs. Torode, Rocque Poisson, St. Peter's, have received news stating that their son, Roy, has won a scholarship to Elizabeth College. The message, dated November 30, was sent by Mr. Brelsford, the Headmaster of St. Peter's School, who also stated: "All other children well."

UNUSUAL APPLICATION

An unusual application was made before the Ordinary Division of the Royal Court on Saturday when a young lady who wished to marry, but was under age, applied for the appointment of a special guardian to her widowed mother, evacuated from the Island, for the purpose of giving the necessary permission for the marriage.

The Court, after hearing particulars of the position, granted the application, which was probably unique in Island legal history.

V.O.B. DRAW WITH GRANDES ROCQUES

Vauxbelets 0 ... Grandes Rocques 0

The S.F.A. fixture between the V.O.B. and Grandes Rocques played at Beau Sejour on Saturday afternoon provided a minor sensation, the points being shared. The Old Boys had more of the play, but were kept at bay by a very resolute defence, and at the final whistle, the score sheet remained a blank.

Torteval Res. 1 ... Centrals Res. 0

At Home Farm, where Torteval and the Centrals were in opposition, the points were claimed by the Westerners, the final score being 1-0.

IN MEMORIAM

UDLE.—In ever loving memory of our dear Dad, John Udale, who passed away on April 6, 1939.

Short and sudden was the call,
Of one so dearly loved by all.
His loving smile and welcome face,
No-one can ever take his place.
From his loving son and daughters, sons-in-law, daughter-in-law and grandsons.

GREEN.—In loving memory of Walter Henry Green, who died April 5, 1927. From his loving wife and children.

Our friend is gone before,
To the celestial shore
He has left his mates behind,
He has all the storms outdone.
Found rest we toil to find,
Landed in the arms of God.
